

Daily Appeal.PART II. ORGANIZATION.

"A wise statesman has said that 'parties are not to be blamed for a revolution; they will be blamed if a revolution would degenerate into anarchy, insurrection would break out against the government, and the country would be plunged into civil war.' The people of the United States would furnish no test of the popular will. Men who agree in sentiment must act in harmony, and men who differ in sentiment must act in opposition. The former can only be secured through the latter."

"As parties are necessary in the government, so is organization indispensable to the existence of parties. It is the duty of every man to ascertain the wishes of the majority and determine the policy to be pursued in accomplishing them. It would be an arrant without discipline. It would also be an arrant of cowardice, to suppose that men of private aims and personal ambition, the hate of conflict with individuals, and principles would be forgotten in the conduct of factions. The party which acts in accordance with its principles, and for the welfare of the nation, will be recognized as the party of progress."

"The success of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accomplishing them. It would be an arrant without discipline. It would also be an arrant of cowardice, to suppose that men of private aims and personal ambition, the hate of conflict with individuals, and principles would be forgotten in the conduct of factions. The party which acts in accordance with its principles, and for the welfare of the nation, will be recognized as the party of progress."

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accomplishing them. It would be an arrant without discipline. It would also be an arrant of cowardice, to suppose that men of private aims and personal ambition, the hate of conflict with individuals, and principles would be forgotten in the conduct of factions. The party which acts in accordance with its principles, and for the welfare of the nation, will be recognized as the party of progress."

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accomplishing them. It would be an arrant without discipline. It would also be an arrant of cowardice, to suppose that men of private aims and personal ambition, the hate of conflict with individuals, and principles would be forgotten in the conduct of factions. The party which acts in accordance with its principles, and for the welfare of the nation, will be recognized as the party of progress."

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

"The party of progress, however, will be measured by the extent to which it secures the welfare of the majority and determines the policy to be pursued in accom-

Publications.Lotteries.*Real Estate.*Hardware.*Horticultural Cards.*Hotels & Restaurants.*Medical.*TU B*E*OIL*ONE BOTTLE OF TURF OIL*Price of 25 cents.*W*Y*E*Y*U*R*E*S*U*L*U*C*U